MILITARY STUFF

Ozen Federation

The three countries within the Federation, being Corstaea, Grenneria, and Osun Tanum, all share military forces and technologies. None of these countries stand particularly strong on their own, so they each specialize in one branch of military, allowing the Federation to be far stronger as a whole. The Federation also has its own dedicated international force with hand picked members from each of the three countries, which is kept to handle any incident not severe enough to justify mobilizing all three countries.

Corstaea specializes in naval strength, Grenneria with land, and Osun Tanum with air. Yulentia Trade Union

Despite formally being unified, there is no agreement between the member nations similar to the Ozen Federation, and Ustonia and Destrea remain hostile. However, due to how open the member nations are to trade with one another, many military technologies are shared and it's rather difficult to keep secrets and intentions hidden. Despite being almost entirely dedicated to economic goals, the Union is an intimidating entity when two of the member nations also keep two of the strongest militaries in the world and aren't afraid to use them. Both Alastor and Ilmaria are only in the Union as a result of such strong arm tactics, but due to their size and weaknesses, are granted the power to call upon the member states for defense.

Avangian Alliance

The Alliance was created as an alternative to the warmongering expansionist activities of Shinzen. In the past, the Shinzenese government was hellbent on annexing the entire continent of Avangia, and the patriotic citizens were largely in support of this, ignoring the hellish circumstances created for everyone by this. After a revolution installed new leadership that abhorred the war, the public opinion that the war was necessary was too much to suppress, so the Alliance was drafted as a compromise.

The original terms of the Alliance were remarkably similar to that of the Ozen Federation, with all three member nations openly sharing military strength and technology while also enjoying free trade and lasting peace. One notable difference between the Alliance and the Federation is that rather than forming an independent international council to maintain it, Shinzen was the commanding authority with total control. Shinzen led a relief effort in this time and led the Alliance into a golden era. Over time, however, the power and meaning of the Alliance has been slowly eroding.

Today, the Alliance is hardly more than a historical symbol and traditional ideal. None of the military agreements have not been renewed, Shinzen has withdrawn its authority over the other regions entirely, and international trade while still being open is no longer unconditionally free. Shinzen, by far the strongest of the three, maintains one-sided protection agreements with Sangyon, the weakest, but Shaohou is fully independent.

Generally, when thinking of manufacturing, you can apply real world companies to this world too.

- Ustonia: USA, Canada, Australia, New Zealand
- Destrea: Spain, Portugal, Italy, Mexico, Brazil, Venezuela, France
- Osun Tanum: Sweden, Denmark, Austria, Belgium, Netherlands, Hungary
- Corstaea: Norway, Finland, Iceland, Germany, United Kingdom, Ireland
- Grenneria: Every single Slavic country and also Romania
- Shinzen: Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Singapore
- Shaohou: China, Vietnam, India, Malaysia
- Sangyon: South Korea, Indonesia, Thailand, Philippines
- Ilmaria and Alastor: N/A

However, there are a few very specific differences.

- Many of the countries listed next to Destrea have ties with the EU, such as Italy and their Eurofighter Typhoon, but any real world multinational project like that should instead be assigned to the Ozen Federation and/or a country within it, because Destrea is an isolationist country.
- Grenneria may include Russia, but Sukhoi, Mikoyan, Ilyushin, Irkut, and Yakovlev will be assigned to Shinzen instead to justify Grenneria's weak aviation and Shinzen's supremacy.
- While there probably was a Nazi Germany-esque event in this world and Germany is listed next to Corstaea, that event and all the weird tech that came with it happened in Destrea instead.

Is Minerva's library just this SCP without the ability to change things? And instead of it being automatic, it all comes from Minerva and her mice? <http://www.scp-wiki.net/scp-4001> do not question this picture

it's unrelated to all this

I had a dream and saw a plane in it. It looked like a combination of this and the X-36. It wasn't completely tailless, but the tail section was almost completely flat. It was absurdly maneuverable and fast, to the point of unfair advantage. It was blue and white with yellow striping. I want this plane in RW.

(Edit: this is the Dauntless from Nagase)

Had another plane dream, this time it was like an F15 + YF23 + SU30 + MIG 1.44 + ADFX-01 mega combo. The tails were a third the normal height and there were big tail strakes on the bottom. The whole thing was very curvy and sleek, and was meant to be the official USAF replacement for the F1

In the risky witches demigod violent broforce type game, seth gets a cameo where he's stuck on a magnet and you have to rescue him, and you get different dialog depending on the character you're playing as. You get him down and then he becomes comm support for the rest of the game.

Freya's fighter squadron has a single human pilot in it. He is her wingman, he is old, and he needs a cane on the ground. He is a legend in the air. She recruited him from an enemy country after meeting in battle, where he outflew her. They spent 20 minutes in full dogfight mode with him glued to her tail most of the time. The battle began and ended around them without either of them firing a single shot, until he finally ended the fight with a single gun burst straight into Freya's canopy, killing her instantly and sending her plane crashing. Then she came back, waltzed into the enemy base, physically grabbed him and recruited him on the spot. He put up no resistance and happily defected from his country, and his only reason for doing it was to fly with Freya again because he'd never had such a good opponent. All he cares about is flying.
